

Managing Debt

Keep debt from owning your future

For most of us, incurring debt is unavoidable. We need a car, a home, college tuition loan—debt arrives at the speed of life. The challenge is to keep it from undermining your financial future. The good news is you can take it a step at a time.

Start small

Your debt management strategy should start with short-term, high-interest debt. That means credit cards. If you only pay the minimum amount due each month, the revolving interest charges could mean that something like a pair of shoes could end up costing several times the purchase price.

Tip: Consider paying off smaller balances first. An early success or two will help you feel more confident—and stay motivated for longer-term goals.

Graduate from student debt

Paying off a student loan—or loans—doesn't have to be a career in itself. To understand your options, visit the Student Loan Center at rps.troweprice.com. The Student Loan Center is brought to you with SoFi, a recognized and respected student loan resource.

Insightful quick-read articles clearly explain student loan issues and potential options.

The Payoff Calculator helps you determine when you'll make your final student loan payment.

Act today, think long term

While you're making progress on retiring the short-term, high-interest debt, keep these longer-term goals in sight, such as:

- Car loan
- Mortgage
- Home equity loan

These are typically lower-interest debts. But in a low interest borrowing environment, you may be able to save money by refinancing.

You'll find a wealth of debt management resources at rps.troweprice.com. From the homepage, click the Financial Wellness tab.