FUND REVIEW

Australian equities had another strong month. The S&P/ASX 200 total return index underperformed other developed peers but outperformed emerging markets in local currency terms.

The top performing sectors in March included consumer discretionary, utilities, and REITs, while the key underperforming areas were materials, information technology, and energy. Oil prices fell as expectations of stronger demand softened, with new lockdowns instituted in Europe. A slowing of credit and steel output restrictions in Tangshan in China caused iron ore prices to decline while gold prices continued to weaken. Expectations of higher inflation, caused by stronger economic growth due to fiscal stimulus and the re-opening of economies as vaccine rollouts speed up, saw 10-year U.S. Treasury yields jump by 33 basis points to 1.73%. Conversely, Australian 10-year bond yields fell 13 basis points to 1.79%, following a spike in February. This fall in yields was assisted by increased bonds purchases by the Reserve Bank of Australia (RBA). The Australian dollar fell by 1.3% against its U.S. counterpart.

PORTFOLIO HIGHLIGHTS

The T. Rowe Price Australian Equity Fund underperformed the market in March. Good performances were posted by Harvey Norman, Aristocrat, and Seek. Notable underperformers included Zip, Kogan, and IDP Education. Ongoing strength in retail spending coupled with a strong house price recovery saw Harvey Norman outperform for the month. In our view, the company is well positioned to continue to benefit from these trends throughout 2021 and beyond. Following very strong share price appreciation in the year to date, Zip underperformed in March. This was primarily driven by profit-taking and the ongoing rotation from growth to value.

OUTLOOK

The consensus market expectation is for higher growth, higher inflation, and therefore higher interest rates. For central banks that are aggressively pursuing policies to attempt to get to their inflation targets, this may be a classic case of “be careful what you wish for”. Higher interest rates in particular have the potential to derail the current economic recovery, due to the heavily indebted nature of most developed economies and may make governments more circumspect about running large budget deficits as funding costs rise. There is also the valuation risk to equity markets and house prices should interest rates rise too much and feed into higher financing costs. In an asset dependent world, higher interest rates are a significant risk we haven’t had to worry about for quite some time. For these reasons we are sceptical about the ability for interest rates to sustainably rise much beyond current levels.

The portfolio is well-positioned in cyclical growth, recovery growth, and high-quality stocks that we believe will benefit as economic conditions continue to improve. We have tilted our positioning towards more domestic exposures to reflect the stronger economic performance of the Australian economy. To fund these portfolio changes we took profit on defensive growth names and somewhat reduced exposure to offshore earners. Despite our positive view on economic growth we expect interest rates to continue to remain low to support the recovery. The recent actions taken by the RBA to aggressively buy longer-dated government bonds in order to bring down long-term interest rates is a strong indication of things to come. As a result, we expect growth stocks to likely continue to do well.
