What drove fund performance during the past 12 months?

- The high yield market posted solid gains in the year ended May 31, 2025, despite growing concerns about the Trump administration's trade policies during the last few months of the period. The resilient economy, healthy equity returns, and mostly favorable technical conditions supported the asset class's performance.
- Compared with the style-specific Bloomberg U.S. High Yield 2% Issuer Capped Bond Index, credit selection in the media segment contributed to relative results, partly due to CMG Media. The capital structure rallied after private equity firm Apollo Global Management, which owns a majority interest in CMG, revealed the potential sale of the media conglomerate. Avoiding troubled issuers that underperformed during the past year, including global energy infrastructure company New Fortress Energy and luxury retail company Saks Global, added value.
- Relative to the style-specific benchmark, our underweight allocation—which we have partly closed—to the other telecommunication (aka wirelines) segment detracted from relative performance. Although the industry remains secularly challenged, the growth of artificial intelligence technology has been a meaningful performance tailwind for these issuers due to increased fiber demand from large-scale data centers and cloud infrastructure companies. Selection in the metals and mining segment weighed, partly due to the underperformance of downstream aluminum producer Constellation.
- The fund seeks a combination of long-term capital appreciation and high income. Over the period, we augmented the fund's allocation to the health care segment, partly through additional investments in hospital companies LifePoint Health and Community Health Systems based on the outlook for patient volumes.
