What drove fund performance during the past 12 months?

- Global stock indexes and fixed income markets were broadly positive for the 12 months ended May 31, 2025. Many major central banks began easing interest rates early in the period as inflation slowed. Early optimism over the U.S. election of President Donald Trump brought, first, a boost to U.S. equities, followed by heightened volatility in global equity markets amid concerns over Trump's fluctuating tariff policies.
- Versus the style-specific Morningstar Moderately Aggressive Target Risk Index, the fund had some contributing factors that had a positive impact on relative returns. Security selection in the underlying U.S. small-cap core equity strategy contributed for the trailing one-year period, as did selection in the underlying U.S. large-cap growth strategy. The fund's allocations to these strategies outpaced their respective style-specific benchmarks, which added value on a relative basis.
- On the negative side, security selection dragged on relative returns overall. Selection among U.S. large-cap core equities was a leading detractor during the period as this allocation trailed its style benchmark. Additionally, diversifying exposure to real assets equities detracted.
- The fund seeks the highest total return over time consistent with a primary emphasis on capital growth and a secondary emphasis on income. It is designed to provide investors with a core multi-asset portfolio that is globally diversified across traditional and alternative asset classes, with an emphasis on the roles of broad diversification, fundamental research, tactical allocation, and risk management.
